The book is known as a standard text in the field. The book is published by Springer Science+Business Media and was authored by Z. A. Simha (Lund University), H. J. Koekoek (Radboud University Nijmegen), and D. Simson (Maastricht University), and was edited by V. A. Feijóó (University of the Witwatersrand). Reviews Dr. David Whittaker, Professor of Veterinary Anatomy at the Royal Veterinary College, gave the book a positive review in the August 2014 issue of the journal Experimental Biology and Medicine. In his review, Whittaker wrote that "it presents a very comprehensive and useful review of the essential steps of reproduction, including oogenesis, spermatogenesis, and embryo development, in a clear and concise manner." Dr. Sean Sullivan, Associate Professor of Anatomy at Saint Anselm College in Goffstown, New Hampshire, gave the book a positive review in the August 2013 issue of the journal Comparative Biochemistry and Physiology Part A. In his review, Sullivan wrote that "The book is highly relevant to the field of anatomy, and especially to the continuing education of the veterinarian. The authors offer excellent examples of anatomical and histological images and photographs, which are very useful for the understanding of the detailed anatomy of reproductive organs in farm animals." Villepin, who resigned as prime minister under pressure in 2006, has long been rumoured to be considering a bid to unseat President Nicolas Sarkozy's centre-right UMP party, which is widely expected to be crushed in the presidential election next year. In an interview with the Journal du Dimanche newspaper, Villepin said: "I will run for the presidency of France. My resignation will not be effective until after the elections." He also said that he will not be a candidate in the second round of the French presidential election. His announcement has been anticipated for some time as his profile in French politics has continued to rise. This week, the former conservative prime minister and ally of Sarkozy won the top post of 82157476af
